Presidents’ Message
From the Desks of Linda Robinson and Doug Storm

Spring is in the air and as of March 8th Daylight Savings has arrived to provide us with more sunlight hours during our busy days—perhaps a welcome break from the 5 o’clock nightfall we’ve experienced the last few months. Your entire REACC and AREOC Board of Directors hope this new year finds you happy, healthy and with an on-going sense of well-being. Continue to enjoy your well-earned retirement and consider the following refrain in your thoughts and actions: “Live your dream in 2015.”

CURRENT ACTIVITIES As discussed in prior issues of The Informer, REACC has a core of volunteers who monitor the weekly Board of Supervisor meetings and who keep their ears to the ground for county-related activities that may affect retirees. Their observations and keen reconnaissance brought to light a Request for Information (RFI) document issued by the County in November of last year. The RFI was released to assess the feasibility of moving the current retiree health insurance delivery system to a “private” health plan exchange for Medicare and non-Medicare retirees. Upon learning the purpose of the RFI, REACC contacted Human Resources and was quickly provided a copy of that document. The County was notified of REACC’s profound interest in this matter and assurances of inclusion in the process were received. In a subsequent meeting with County staff we were advised that responses from private exchange vendors were received but did not meet the administrative needs of the County—at least at this time. A traditional Request for Proposal (RFP) process will move forward seeking bids from health service providers during the next few months. A representative from REACC will participate on an evaluation panel which will review proposals submitted by current and/or other providers. Quality medical services provided at an affordable price will be critical in reviewing and examining any proposal. REACC Board members will be meeting with the County and will keep you advised of actions and developments.

During this year REACC representatives met with members of the...

Orange County Council on Aging.

We have learned this organization provides a number of valuable services, free of charge, which could benefit both our pre-65 and post-65 members.

The main office for the Council on Aging is located in Santa Ana and provides training to help seniors understand and navigate the Medicare system. Understanding the Medicare process can be difficult but help is available through the Council’s “Roadmap to Medicare Program.” This class is a must as you become Medicare-eligible. Staff and volunteers provide comprehensive information to assist you in your choice of various services through a counseling and advocacy program. Also provided is a long-term health care ombudsman program as well as programs that reconnect isolated adults and older individuals with the community. As many retirees face issues related to aging parents these programs can be of great help and benefit. The Council on Aging operates a friendly visitor program for shut-in seniors and checks on individuals in their homes. An additional program operates during the holidays to deliver gifts to seniors who otherwise would not receive holiday attention.

Our goal in working with the Council on Aging is to provide REAOC members with a valuable resource which could provide needed services during retirement years.

LITIGATION UPDATE  It’s true. The wheels of justice move slowly. The Harris, Jahn, McConnell vs County of Orange Class Action Lawsuit continues to proceed through the federal court system. A ruling has not, as yet, been issued by judges of the 9th Circuit panel who heard this case in February of 2014. The last issue of The Informer noted the U.S. Supreme Court heard a case that could impact the 9th Circuit’s ruling (M&G Polymers USA vs Tackett—a private sector case heard by the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal which addresses vesting rights if a bargaining agreement is silent on the duration of retiree health benefits). The Supreme Court heard the case last November and has recently ordered the 6th Circuit to re-try the case. Whether or not the outcome of this case would apply to the public sector and different facts that surround the noted Class Action case is unknown. Time will tell. We will update you on case developments as they occur.

In closing, we want to thank each and every member for your continued support and participation in REAOC. The importance of staying united as retirees has become even more important in today’s world as various political and special interest factions attempt to challenge the pensions and benefits we worked for and earned as employees during our many, many years of service to the public and to the County. Retirees, stay united!! Take care and be well.

New Security Measures at County Board of Supervisors Meetings

If you attend Orange County Board of Supervisors meetings, you will be required to pass through a metal detector before entering the Board meeting room. Designed to boost security, the new procedure started on March 3.

According to a news release issued by the CEO, the recommendation to install metal detectors came from the Orange County Intelligence Assessment Center, a multi-jurisdictional network of law enforcement agencies that develops best practices to protect residents, visitors and critical infrastructure of the county.

Courthouses in Orange County have used metal detectors since 1999.

"The safety of our employees and visitors to our meetings is my primary concern," Board Chairman Todd Spitzer said. "The minor inconvenience of metal detectors will assure that our meetings can be conducted in a safe and appropriate environment."

The metal detector inside the Hall of Administration will be staffed by two Sheriff's Dept. special officers. Purses and bags also will be subject to search.

Other counties using metal detectors for security purposes during Board of Supervisors meetings include Los Angeles, San Bernardino, San Diego and Alameda counties.

Security costs, estimated at $23,000 annually, will be paid from the CEO's budget.

CRCEA Spring Meeting in Ontario

The California Retired County Employees Association (CRCEA) will hold its Spring Conference in Ontario April 20-22. The two-and-a-half day conference is hosted by the Retired Employees of San Bernardino County at the Ayres Hotel and Suites, 1945 E. Holt Blvd. in Ontario.

The conference theme, "Stronger Together," stresses the importance of the 20 county retirement systems throughout the state under the 1937 Retirement Act to build a strong coalition and work together to strengthen and protect the benefits guaranteed to retired public workers. For information on speakers and other conference activities, go to CRCEA's website at www.crcea.org. A link to CRCEA is also found at REAOC's website, www.reaoc.org.

Hemet Chapter Luncheon in April
The 1987 movie “Wall Street” demonstrated how the corporate “Greed is Good!” philosophy helped destroy defined benefit pensions in the private sector. Through corporate mergers and acquisitions, the prize was often looting employee pension plans, especially the over-funded plans. Unfortunately, the real-life scenario that occurred over the last 30 years in corporate America has, in fact, eliminated most private sector defined benefit pension plans. They were most often replaced with 401(k) savings plans. But when you ask U.S. workers which plan they would prefer for retirement security, they respond with a preference for a guaranteed stream of pension payments provided through defined benefit plans vs. the do-it-yourself 401(k) plans that are subject to volatility, leakage through loans, high fees and often grossly underfunded.

So why did private sector workers let this happen to them? And what are the differences in what happened in the private sector and the pension reform movement in the public sector?

In the private sector, the elimination of worker pensions came not only through mergers, acquisitions and bankruptcies but from CEOs simply imposing the changes on their workers. Examples show a pattern of CEOs announcing that there was a problem with the pension fund (which in many cases there wasn’t) and advising employees of a new and better pension replacement plan, such as a cash balance pension plan or pension equity plan and later, the infamous 401(k) savings plan. Comparisons of the differences between the old and new plan were often not provided to employees or masked so employees didn’t know the full effect of the change until they were ready to retire. Private sector unions that had previously represented worker interests were mostly gone by this time. And for corporate CEOs, it must have been like “taking candy from a baby” and they were richly rewarded through pay-for-performance measures for their actions. The average annual compensation for Fortune 500 CEOs is now $10.8 million or 257 times the average worker (who no longer has a pension).

In the public sector, changes to pensions are being attempted through voter initiatives, either to close public pension systems or to eliminate legal protections for pensions. But public sector unions are still in place representing employee interests. And top executive pay in government is closer to six times average worker pay and they are not financially rewarded for duping their employees out of their pensions. But probably the most important difference is that we now have evidence that the 401(k) savings plans that were never designed to replace pensions are becoming a real financial disaster for private sector retirees.

The question is: Why would anyone want to follow a failed private sector strategy (or more appropriately, a gimmick) that is currently producing such devastating financial results for our American workers? The answer is: We shouldn’t follow; we should fight to protect our defined benefit plans!

King Ozymandias of Assyria was running low on cash after years of war with the Hittites. His last great possession was the Star of the Euphrates, the most valuable diamond in the ancient world. Desperate, he went to Croesus, the pawnbroker, to ask for a loan. Croesus said, “I’ll give you 100,000 dinars for it.”

“But I paid a million dinars for it,” the King protested. “Don’t you know who I am? I am the King!”

Croesus replied: “When you wish to pawn a Star, makes no difference who you are.”

A man rushed into a busy doctor’s surgery and shouted, “Doctor! I think I’m shrinking!”

The doctor calmly responded, “Now settle down. You’ll just have to be a little patient.”

WANT TO LIVE TO BE 90-PLUS?
Researchers at UC Irvine uncovered a few surprising findings from an age 90-plus study by geriatric neurologist Claudia Kawas. Since 2003, Kawas has been looking at what makes people live to 90 and beyond. Currently in the U.S. two million people are older than 90. That could hit 10 million by 2050, according to Kawas, who reported her findings at a lecture at the Newport Beach Public Library in January. Her talk was covered by the Orange County Register on January 31.

About 30 years ago, USC researchers sent a 14-page questionnaire to residents of Leisure World, now Laguna Woods, and some 13,000 people ranging in age from 55 to 100 responded. About two-thirds were female. Kawas said the study didn’t show much benefit in taking vitamins A, C, E or calcium for longevity. Tea had no effect, and neither did soda. However, people who consumed a modest amount of alcohol—from one or two drinks a week to one daily drink—seemed to live longer on average. And people who also consumed 200-400 milligrams of caffeine per day—about one small Starbucks coffee—lived longer on average.

NEW STUDY EXPLORES AGING POPULATION BEHIND THE WHEEL
Despite stereotypes to the contrary, drivers 65 and older are among the safest drivers on the road, the Orange County Register reported on February 1. According to the Insurance Institute for Traffic Safety, seniors are more likely to wear seat belts and less likely to drink or text while driving compared with any other age group. However, they are more likely to die if they are involved in a crash.

With 25% of all U.S. drivers expected to be 65 or older in just 10 years, balancing the health and mobility needs of an aging population with public safety is a topic of increasing interest. This spring the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety is launching the largest interdisciplinary study of aging drivers ever conducted in the U.S. Led by Columbia University in NY in conjunction with UC San Diego, Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, the University of Michigan and the University of Colorado, the Longitudinal Research On Aging Drivers—or LongROAD—study will track 3,000 drivers between the ages of 65 and 79 for five years.

Participants recruited from the medical clinics associated with each university will be outfitted with GPS units to track their driving behaviors and correlated with individual medical records. Drivers also will be questioned about their cars’ safety features to determine if they help or hinder older drivers. Safety features would include blind-spot monitors and adaptive cruise control.

According to the American Automobile Association (AAA), a 70-year-old driver is four times more likely to die in a traffic accident than a 20-year-old in an accident of the same intensity, with “fragility” the cause in more than half of senior traffic fatalities. About 95% of senior citizens use medications that may impair driving, according to the AAA, which offers a medication database for drivers called Roadwise RX. The interactive database helps drivers understand the side effects of individual medications as well as interactions between medicines that might impair driving.

AAA offers other tools as well, including a CarFit program that helps seniors set up their mirrors and seats to drive more safely, and a Drivers 65+ Check Your Performance online quiz that prompts drivers with questions and rates their answers with scores of "go," “caution” or “stop,” the latter of which means the driver engages in too many unsafe driving behaviors and could pose a hazard to themselves and other drivers.

“There are 95-year-olds who are healthy and 60-year-olds who are not,” said Dr. Emmy Betz, assistant professor of emergency medicine at the University of Colorado Anschutz School of Medicine. She advises older drivers to make plans with family members or friends and to consult with doctors about the impacts of their health and their medications on driving.

AN INDIAN CHIEF WAS FEELING VERY sick, so he summoned the medicine man. After a brief examination, the medicine man took out a long, thin strip of elk rawhide and gave it to the chief, telling him to bite off, chew and swallow one inch of the leather every day. After a month, the medicine man returned to see how the chief was feeling. The chief shrugged and said, “The thong is ended, but the malady lingers on.”
