Scholarship Program. Finalists will be chosen after the rigorous application and evaluation process concludes. Recipients of the awards will be recognized at the REAOC May luncheon.

Several Board members and our Executive Director represented REAOC at the semiannual California Retired County Employees Association (CRCEA) Spring Conference held in San Diego April 15-17. The conference provided an excellent, statewide opportunity to network with all twenty 1937 Act county retiree associations. The agenda included timely and pertinent presentations and participants shared relevant information regarding retirement issues and pension security.

AREOC and REAOC Board members actively participate in NCPERS (National Conference on Public Employees Retirement Systems), which is a nationwide coalition of defined benefits funds and stakeholders. As a member of NCPERS, REAOC and AREOC are provided a vast array of resources including Washington Legislative Update webinars covering major happenings in Washington, D.C. and the States. Retirement security and research are main topics for conferences and webinars.

The REAOC website is constantly updated with timely material related to retirement and includes current news articles, communications and items of interest to retirees. The website, www.reaoc.org can be a valuable source of information for the REAOC membership.

We are pleased to announce REAOC now has over 6,250 retired and associate members. If you know retirees who are not members, please encourage them to join us. There is strength in numbers and when we are united, our voices are heard.

In closing, we want to thank you for your continued membership, support and participation in REAOC. Your loyalty is invaluable to the success of this organization. Enjoy your summer. Be safe and stay united.

Health Policies In A Divided Congress

by Rebecca Guider and Sara Ruckle-Harms, REAOC attendees

The UCI Center for Health Care Management and Policy sponsors a yearly conference highlighting the challenges and concerns facing the nation's healthcare system. Experts in the Health Care field provided their perspective on "Health Policies in a Divided Congress" this past February.

THE CHALLENGE OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS – A MAJOR THEME

- The challenge: Between 2008 and 2015, cost of the most common prescription drugs increased by 164 percent, with specialty drugs being a major driver.
- A strong push to allow Medicare to negotiate prescription drug prices and allow the importation of drugs from other countries is expected.
- These experts are optimistic that decreasing drug prices will be one of the few topics that Congress is likely to work together on this coming year.

WHERE MAY HEALTH CARE BE HEADED?

- The speakers generally agreed that building on the Affordable Care Act is the best path forward for improving our health care delivery system.
- Universal Healthcare, although an admirable goal, is unlikely to be implemented given the complexity of our healthcare system and the difficulty of compromise in Washington, DC.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER DR. NORM

ORNSTEIN, SCHOLAR, TV COMMENTATOR AND AUTHOR

- He noted that by 2040, 70% of the U.S. population will live in just 15 states and half of our population will live in just 8 of those states.
- "What this means is that the Electoral College, which is already skewed towards small, rural states, will become even more skewed in their favor," according to Dr. Ornstein.

- He warned that this could increase feelings of political illegitimacy among Americans and create regional divides, making compromise on issues such as healthcare very difficult.
- According to a study by the Federal Reserve, 40 percent of Americans cannot find $400 in cash to pay for an emergency event;
- Dr. Ornstein shared the most likely emergency that Americans will face is a health emergency, which tells you why health policy issues keep moving to the top of the list of everyone's concerns.

BIG DATA IN HEALTH CARE

- Vast amounts of patient health data are collected, however, it is very much underutilized.
- Healthcare systems must focus on the advantages of safe, respectful use of patient data.
- The ability to answer questions such as, "If a drug costs 100-times more, are we getting 100-times more benefit?" are now possible utilizing big data.
- The best way to practice medicine requires a shift in our thinking from "Doctors vs. Computers" to "Doctors with Computers" in order to provide the best of care.

INNOVATION IN MEDICINE – IMPACTING THE BUSINESS OF MEDICINE AND HEALTHCARE

- Something as simple as "Fall Prevention Programs" have reduced the number of hip fractures by 40%. Great news for seniors!
- With new technology, Aortic Heart Valve replacement procedures can be completed in twelve minutes with "Trans Catheter Valves". No bones are broken, just an overnight hospital stay, and the results are four times better than traditional Aortic Valve replacement.

SOME THOUGHTS

- Any significant changes in our health care system will reverberate throughout the hospital, insurance, and financial industries;
- Understanding and adapting to these changes will be an important skill for all involved, both in the medical community, as well as our elected representatives in the present and in the future;
- Most importantly, each of us must become knowledgeable patients and advocates for our own care!

May Program – David Carlaw, Comedian

by Robin Mattocks

We are excited to have the one and only, Dave Carlaw, entertain us in May. Dave is living proof there is fulfilling life after retirement!

In his early years of comedy, he paid his dues by performing at coffee houses and bars. He appeared at open mic nights at establishments frequented by poetry readers and folk singers.

Like us, Dave is also an escapee (whoops, your editor meant retiree) from the County of Orange! While employed, many REAOC members have met, interacted with, or have at least seen Dave Carlaw's name during their County career. As Chief of

Do I Really Need To Reinvent Myself?

Judy McLane

Everywhere I look I see article headlines, books, speakers and various messages all extolling the virtues of reinventing yourself at this stage in life. Sigh. Really? Is that what we need to do? At this point in our lives?

Maybe it's just me, but I'm not fond of the word "reinvention." It makes it sound like who we are is not good enough, exciting enough, whatever enough now that we're older and done with our focus on careers and raising a family. Well, I say "Enough." I'm taking issue with it. Right here, right now.

Here's my thinking. By the time we get to age 50 or more, we've lived a lot of life. We've had many experiences – some good, some not so good, achieved many successes, and probably logged a few (or more) failures along the way. Through all of it, the ups and downs and turn-arounds, we've learned a thing or two about life and about ourselves. And for the most part, at least among the folks I know (and research I've read), we're happier and more content than ever before. And now we're supposed to embark upon a reinvention? Are you kidding me? I just got here and I like it. Why would I want to start over?

I think the allure of reinventing oneself arises because for the first time in a very long time, we are free from many of the obligatory and externally imposed roles or self-imposed limitations that we've been living with until now, and perhaps we find ourselves at a sort of apex. We now have more years behind us than in front of us, so it begs the question of ourselves "Is it too late to be the me I always wanted to be?" Without those old roles and limitations, we're free to answer that question. Which can be exhilarating and paralyzing at the same time.

So, it starts to sound like a good idea to reinvent who we are. After all, we might suppose, there must be a new me lurking somewhere under the veil of years and age where my true self will emerge. A new me that is not this me—maybe I'll be braver, smarter, cooler, more accomplished, more creative, adventurous... just more.

Phooey! You are already all that. You don't make it this far in life without absorbing a little—or a lot—of the skills, talent, knowledge and wisdom to unleash any part of you that is seeking more.

"If you begin to understand what you are without trying to change it, then what you are undergoes a transformation." – J. Krishnamurti

So, while I am not a fan of the word or idea of reinventing oneself into a new you, I am a huge fan of questioning the status quo—especially now. Question where you are in your life, what you want out of life, what you have to offer. Here are a few questions that I think can be very revealing:

What is important to me? What am I truly good at? What is my potential, what can I become?

As I see it, we are better equipped and primed to take on any new direction we choose at this point in our lives. Ask yourself the questions, take a look at the answers, and then apply some of all that life experience and wisdom that's living inside of you to make decisions, to take steps.

Employee Relations for the County Human Resources Department, he resolved labor relations issues for managers and employees in all County agencies working with unions, attorneys, arbitrators and mediators. If you ever read your M.O.U. (Memorandum of Understanding), you would have seen his name at the top of the negotiators. Your editor had the honor of personally working with Dave for many years, during which I witnessed a multitude of his interesting, often hilarious stories. Dave is now "living the dream." His comedy is based on real life experiences including work, relationships and aging. During the last 15 years, Dave has performed at the Hollywood Comedy Store, The Laff Stop and hundreds of other popular venues. He is frequently seen locally at the Camino Real Playhouse. He has appeared and is in constant demand at professional gatherings, corporate events, charitable fundraisers and private celebrations including birthdays, retirements and anniversaries. Yours truly has enjoyed Dave's comedy show and am confident you will too. Make your reservation for his special, retiree-focused show now!

Mother's Day

by Robin Mattocks

Mother's Day, an opportunity to honor and remember mothers, falls on Sunday, May 12 this year. Some may have had close relationships, others may never have known their mothers, and others may have had a relationship somewhere in between. Some of us grow up to be mothers (or fathers) and some not. Some families have two mothers, others have two fathers and others may be any mixture of grandparents, foster or adoptive mothers or these days those who identify as nonbinary. Hopefully most have had a mother figure of sorts to remember with fondness.

I honor my own mother with this story. It's been so many years since my mother has been gone but I still wonder what she would think of me today. She certainly encouraged me to develop goals and gave me hope. I wouldn't be whoever I am today without that encouragement. She knew she was dying and wouldn't be here to guide me further. She told me, "You can be whoever and whatever you want. You have the ability so don't ever give up!"

I lost my Mom to breast cancer when I was 16 when she was 46. She wanted to stay on this planet for my younger brother and me but it was beyond her control. So many things I don't remember about her and wish I could, especially her voice. Motherless daughters don't always know what's appropriate and just wing it. I wish I would have paid more attention to her and appreciated her more when she was here.

Most of all, she taught me strength in the face of adversity and pain. She endured and continued to be cheerful. Mom made the best of the worst circumstances. When she lost the use of her dominant right hand, she learned to use her left and created amazing holiday ornaments from her costume jewelry for keepsakes. She remained patient, loving and humble, never demanding, thus I wanted to please her. She taught me responsibility at an early age by sending me to get a few basic groceries on my bike. She left specific instructions for cooking to help feed the family as needed. As she grew weaker, she had few requests but to hear some of her favorite songs played on the piano. I'm certain that served her spirit as well as kept us busy.

I choose to focus on the times when she was well and active, remembering everything from hanging clothes on the line in our backyard (prior to dryers) to how she loved to dance with my Dad and did often. She reveled in simple pleasures, reading mysteries, swimming with us, visiting with neighbors and laughing at comedies on tv.

I am thankful for my mother and better understand some of her challenges having been a mother as well. She taught us to value all relationships as she did. To her, people were always more important than worldly possessions were. As we all do, she did the best she could with what she had available at the time. I am so blessed to have had my mother, even if just for a short time. Her lessons have lasted a lifetime!

Reinvent Myself?

Just know that regardless of where you land, you are enough.

To be clear, I am a proponent of continuous, self-improvement and personal growth. But I believe that we must embark upon any new journey with the knowledge and acceptance that who we are right now is good, exactly as we are. And build from there.

"The voyage of discovery is not in seeking new landscapes, but in having new eyes." – Marcel Proust

So, I'd like to offer a replacement word. Rather than reinvent which connotes creating something new and different, how about Rediscover. Rediscover, to me, seems to say "Go inside. You have the answers." Look under the layers, the years, the learnings. Uncover what's there—dreams, goals, talents – that has been hiding, abandoned or forgotten for years. Then...decide how to move forward.

In closing, I want to share a passage that I read recently that seems to sum this up perfectly. "Becoming isn't about arriving somewhere or achieving a certain aim. I see it instead as forward motion, a means of evolving, a way to reach continuously toward a better self. The journey doesn't end. It's all a process, steps along a path. Becoming requires equal parts patience and rigor. Becoming is never giving up on the idea that there's more growing to be done." I would love to hear your thoughts about all of this, and about whatever journey you're on. We can learn so much from one another. Till next time, Judy
